

Sustainable Land Management

South-south partnerships

By Felix Nicolier

One of our concerns is networking and exchanging information and knowledge between people, organizations, and countries in the South. In our view, this can strengthen efforts to achieve sustainable development to the extent that locally adapted solutions that have been successfully applied in one developing country can make an important contribution in another country with similar conditions.

All of our project partners involved in the area of sustainable land use - namely, the agriculture ministries in Eritrea, the Halhale agricultural research station (Eritrea) and its main partner, the Danish government development agency (DANIDA), as well as the Syngenta Foundation and the CDE (University of Berne) - provide this type of support for the exchange between the two Sahel countries of Mali and Eritrea.
